Biographical/Historical note

The Keweenaw Historical Society was founded in 1912 by a group led by John T. Reeder and John A. Doelle, who became the society's first president and secretary-treasurer respectively. The organization worked to "collect and preserve material bearing on the history of Keweenaw Peninsula, and to promote local historical study and research" (Box 10, Folder 3: Constitution).

The Houghton Public Library (now the Portage Lake District Library) provided a room for the storage of material collected by the society. The librarian also served as the society's curator (originally called custodian). Within the first few years of its foundation, the society had amassed a substantial collection of historical books, photographs, artifacts, and records.

After the death of President J. T. Reeder in 1937, the Keweenaw Historical Society became largely moribund, despite the efforts of James Fisher of the Michigan College of Mining and Technology (MCMT), who succeeded Reeder in 1939. Although some additions continued to be made to the society's collection, it was Roy Drier's collection at MCMT [see MS-020, Roy Drier Collection] that became more and more the destination of donated historical materials.

In 1961, the Houghton County Historical Society was founded as the successor to the Keweenaw Historical Society, which turned over its extensive historical collection to form the basis for the new organization's museum collections.

Scope and Contents note

The Keweenaw Historical Society Collection contains a large array of historical records collected by the society from throughout the Copper Country, including mining company records, store records, county clerk records, and the records of its predecessor, the Houghton County Historical Society and Mining Institute.

Collection Inventory

Series I: Houghton County Historical Society and Mining Institute Records 1866-1889

Biographical/Historical note

The Houghton County Historical Society and Mining Institute was founded in 1866 and included many prominent local figures, such as Ransom Shelden (1814-1878), John Chassell, W. B. Frue (1830-1881), Jay A. Hubbell (1829-1900), Richard M. Hoar (1831-1903), and James O'Grady.

The society organized regular lectures on a variety of historical topics, which were generally unrelated to local history. Secretary Alexander Pope, Jr. began the society's book collection by donating numerous volumes on history, religion, law, and engineering. In addition to a handful of books, other members donated assorted artifacts and mining company reports.

The Houghton County Historical Society and Mining Institute became defunct by the 1880s and sometime in the next few decades its records and collection were transferred to the Michigan College of Mines. The college subsequently donated the material to the newly formed Keweenaw Historical Society in 1913.

Subseries I: Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company Records 1850s-1890sBiographical/Historical note

In the late 1840s, John R. Grout (1806-1882) convinced people connected with the brass manufacturing industry in Waterbury, Connecticut to back his plans for a copper smelter in Detroit to handle copper from Lake Superior. This was the Waterbury and Detroit Copper Company which was organized and built the Detroit smelter in 1850.

In 1860, the Portage Lake Smelting Works were built by the Bigelow group of investors. Seven years later, it consolidated with the Waterbury and Detroit Copper Company as the Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company.

The Detroit smelter was closed in 1887, the same year that the Bigelow group founded the Tamarack-Osceola Copper Manufacturing Company. This new company constructed the Dollar Bay Smelting Works the following year. In 1891, it merged with the Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company to create the jointly owned Lake Superior Smelting Company.

The Bigelow group bought out the interests of the Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company in 1898 and took sole control of the Lake Superior Smelting Company. Ownership of the company was included in the sale of the Bigelow group's mining interest in Michigan to the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company in 1909. C & H finally dissolved the company in 1924.

John R. Grout was General Manager of the Waterbury and Detroit Copper Company and its successors from its founding until his death in 1882. He was succeeded by his longtime associate James R. Cooper (1829-1906).

Scope and Contents note

The Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company Records contain correspondence, receipts, invoices, and reports of General Managers John R. Grout and James R. Cooper and Chief Clerk Z. W. Wright. It includes records from its predecessor, the Waterbury and Detroit Copper Company.

Note that the Keweenaw Historical Society filed the material into company files based on the content of the letter, not the correspondent.

Subseries I: Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company Records

Note that the records of the Detroit and Lake Superior Copper Company are split between this subseries and Series II of MS-020, Roy Drier Collection. Researchers are encouraged to consult both collections.
